I have a function to update a resource that has many parameters. Should I use POST, PUT or DELETE for this? Right now I am using POST but I am not sure if this is the proper way to do it. A: The usage of POST is good as it is the way the client can enqueue a request to be handled by the server. I would personally use POST on this case because the usage of PUT and DELETE seems weird as the client wants to send a request to the server. Do check out this explanation on when to use POST, PUT and DELETE: When to use HTTP POST, PUT and DELETE Thursday, August 19, 2010 It's been a while... I missed writing here. Really, I have been struggling and have been in "stuck in between" place. I have been trying to think of a way to get back into a routine, while still working on things that I am really passionate about and while still managing all my day to day responsibilities. Well, on the way to work today I saw a thought to write my blog and as always, I felt the need to share. I hope this blog entry does not sound too much like a "New Year New Me" kinda entry. I am just trying to get back into the groove, into the routine and getting back to "my" me. So, here is how I view it... Before I was married, I was a single girl, yes, living on my own, eating out a lot and having a lot of freedom, being completely selfish. It was great, but, I found out that being alone isn't all about eating out all the time and having freedom, but it is about being honest with yourself, being true to who you are, being courageous, taking chances, being genuine and being grateful for all the people in your life. When I got married, I had the perfect little "play" house with a wonderful husband, a wonderful, wonderful daughter and a wonderful, wonderful (albeit, still a bit) little boy, it was great.
